With tens of thousands of certified medical marijuana patients in Mass, dispensaries already open and approved to serve them, more than 150,000 ounces sold in the state since June 2015, and recreational shops coming soon, it is clear that the cannabis industry is booming around here. Which means that knowledgeable stewards are needed. The Northeastern Institute of Cannabis, which opened in Natick in 2014, is no longer operating, but across the state and online there are several other opportunities to learn about the medicine and industry—whether you are a physician or simply a curious consumer.

DO YOU WANT TO WORK IN A DISPENSARY?

Hemp Staff Marijuana Dispensary Training Events

Hemp Staff offers dispensary training classes in various states, with its next event in Mass coming up on June 18 at the DoubleTree Hotel in Danvers. The course will be offered at two times and is supposed to “help you understand the industry and the medication which will help boost your resume with the knowledge you need to speak intelligently when you land that interview for an opening at a dispensary in the near future.” The cost is $249 in advance or $300 at the door. In addition to the Mass regulations, marijuana laws from other states around New England will be covered, as will resume building, in the lead-up to a certification test at the end of the class.
